

This technology has been tried and failed in Europe. I don't believe it will be any better in the USA. Powerline interference from insulators, junctions etc., is very difficult to get utility companies to address. From all the information I can gather this will cause harmful interference to home electronics, amateur, cb and other consumer users of electronic receiving equipment.